Quarry reclamation

Rehabilitated quarries provide an international benchmark for conservation. The network of ponds, lakes and streams are utilized for the captive breeding of critically endangered native species of birds, reptiles and fish.

Quarried land is also returned to productive farmland, providing pastoral stock grazing, that continues to become an income source.

Quarry Rehabilitation and Stream enhancement

The Isaac Conservation and Wildlife Trust provides annual sponsorship to;

The Grovetown Lagoon located near Blenheim, is a community project to restore a freshwater wetland, to become a sanctuary for native species and people.

The Diana Isaac Cup is awarded biennially to land owners for their weaving of native plants into the working lands of the Selwyn District.

The Canterbury Aoraki Conservation Board Award recipients are community groups, schools and individuals that are taking action in conservation.
